Gender Pay Report 2017

What is the gender pay gap?

The Government recently published regulations for Gender Pay Gap Reporting, requiring UK companies with more than 250 employees to publish their Gender Pay statistics. The gender pay gap shows the difference in the average hourly earnings of men and women across Logistex Ltd regardless of their roles or industry sectors. The statistics can be affected by a range of factors, including the different number of men and women across all roles within the workforce.

Employer of Choice

One of Logistex's key objectives is to be an employer of choice for all current and prospective employees. We are committed to developing a diverse and inclusive workforce with no tolerance of any discrimination of any type.

Since the Company Management Buyout (MBO) in 2011, when we employed 206 people, we have grown to more than 250 employees. Logistex has and continues to offer several working practices to all our staff to include but not limited to;

- Working from home
- Flexible working hours
- Job share
- Additional employee benefits including but not limited to private medical cover, additional holiday options and employee recognition awards

Logistex is confident that its gender pay gap does not stem from paying men and women differently for the same or equivalent work. Rather its gender pay gap is the result of the roles in which men and women work within the organisation and the salaries that these roles attract.

How do we compare nationally?

The mean gender pay gap for the whole economy (according to the October 2017 Office for National Statistics (ONS) Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE figures) is 17.4%, while in the skilled trades occupations it is 24.8% and associate professional and technical occupations it is 11.2%. Logistex's gender pay gap compares favourably with that of organisations within the skilled trades sector.

The vast majority of organisations have a gender pay gap, and we are pleased to be able to say that Logistex is comparable with that of other organisations within the same industry.

Across the UK economy as a whole, men are more likely than women to be in senior roles and men are more likely to be in engineering, technical and IT-related roles, which attract higher rates of pay than other roles at similar levels of seniority. Women are more likely than men to have had breaks from work that have affected their career progression, for example to bring up children. Women are also more likely to work in clerical roles as well as part time roles.

This pattern for the UK economy as a whole is reflected in the make-up of the Logistex workforce, where the majority of clerical administrators are women, while the majority of engineering, IT, line manager and senior manager roles are held by men. However, this picture is changing within Logistex, as more women have been recruited and subsequently earned promotion within our IT and Systems Departments.

What is Logistex doing to address its gender pay gap?

While Logistex gender pay gap compares favorably with that of organisations within the skilled trades sector, this is not a subject about which Logistex is complacent, and it is committed to doing everything that it can to reduce the gap. However, Logistex also recognises that its scope to act is limited in some areas - it has, for example, no direct control over the subjects that individuals choose to study or the career choices that they make.

To date, the steps that Logistex has taken to promote gender diversity in all areas of its workforce include the following:

Appointing a Head of HR who will take responsibility for addressing any areas of concern in relation to any pay gaps including creating an evidence baseline to identify any barriers to gender equality and determine priorities for action.

In 2017 Logistex introduced gender monitoring to understand:

- the proportions of men and women applying for jobs and being recruited.
- the proportions of men and women applying for and obtaining promotions.
- the proportions of men and women leaving Logistex and their reasons for leaving.
- the numbers of men and women in each role and pay band.
- the take-up of flexible working arrangements by gender and level within Logistex.
- the proportion of men and women who return to their original job after a period of maternity or other parental leave.
- the proportion of men and women still in post a year on from a return to work after a period of maternity or other parental leave.

Logistex's flexible working policy was substantially revised in February 2018, to make it clear that employees in all areas and levels within Logistex will be considered for flexible working, regardless of their role and level of seniority, and that flexible working need not be limited to part-time working. Training with all managers will commence during 2018 about the benefits of enabling staff to work flexibly.

None of these initiatives will, of itself, remove the gender pay gap - and it may be several years before some have any impact at all. In the meantime, Logistex is committed to reporting on an annual basis on what it is doing to reduce the gender pay gap and the progress that it is making.

In the coming year, Logistex is also committed to:

- extend its evidence-gathering to include qualitative data. It will do this through a consultation exercise across all areas and levels of the organisation to identify the barriers (and the drivers) for women employees.
- reviewing its policy on bonus payments;
- continuing with the childcare voucher scheme and any Government schemes that may replace this.
- launching an education-partnering pilot scheme with local schools and colleges, to raise young people's awareness of the different career opportunities available within the engineering and IT sector, and to help dispel any misperceptions and stereotypes.

Any further initiatives launched throughout the year will be reported via the Company newsletter.

I, Lorraine Kent, Head of HR, confirm that the information in this statement is accurate.
